Why employers choose MPP

■ MPP strengthens your workforce

A defined benefit pension is a meaningful recruitment and retention advantage. Employers that offer strong retirement benefits are better positioned to attract and keep talent in a competitive labour market—while also helping reduce financial stress and support employee health and well-being.¹

■ Stability for your budget and your team

MPP's scale and professional management help stabilize contribution rates and keep administrative and investment costs low, supporting long-term planning.

■ A pension partner you can rely on

Running an organization comes with enough responsibility; you don't need to become a pension expert to offer a meaningful retirement benefit. MPP is professionally administered, with employer education, implementation support and ongoing service built in.

Employers and employees work together to build an employee's future pension.

How it works

- MPP is a defined benefit pension plan, which means your employees receive a predictable, guaranteed lifetime income in retirement based on their salary and years of service.
- Employers and employees both contribute to the plan, and contributions are pooled and professionally invested. Our solid investment returns pay $7.50 of every $10 paid in pensions. Member and employer contributions make up the rest.
- MPP removes the guesswork for employees and delivers a stable benefit, helping reduce financial stress and support long-term planning.

Eligibility and onboarding

Many public sector and publicly funded organizations in British Columbia are eligible to join MPP. You may be one of them.

Whether you're just exploring or ready to join, our team is here to help you understand eligibility, walk through enrolment requirements and answer your questions.

If you decide to move forward and apply, we'll continue to support you with startup support and access to employee education resources.

What MPP offers your employees

A pension promise

A defined benefit pension provides guaranteed lifetime retirement income, supported by shared contributions and designed to grow over time with cost-of-living adjustments.

Holistic support

MPP helps protect employees and their families with built-in benefits that support long-term well-being, including optional health and dental coverage in retirement as well as survivor and disability benefits.

A benefit that grows with their career

The plan is designed to support employees throughout their careers with a pension that can move with them across employers. Retirement income is calculated based on their highest five years of earnings, turning career growth into lasting security.

Secure and stable plan management

With MPP, employees aren't left to navigate complex investment choices, track markets or worry about making their savings last. Professional investment management and strong governance ensure the plan is sustainable for the long term, so they can trust their pension will be there when they need it.
